

STATEMENT REGARDING ABLEPOINT

Request for Evidence, Clarification, Independent Review and Reasoned Response

Date: 15 September 2026

To: Ablepoint Management / Relevant Complaints, Safeguarding and Decision-Making Officer

1. PURPOSE OF THIS STATEMENT

I am providing this statement to request a clear, evidence-based and procedurally fair response concerning my treatment, safety, accommodation, supports, complaints and matters that I allege have adversely affected me.

I am not asking Ablepoint simply to accept my allegations as established facts.

I am asking Ablepoint to identify what it says is established, what it disputes, what evidence it relies upon, what remains unknown, and what requires further investigation.

My request is for the relevant evidence to be preserved and examined, and for a reasoned response to be provided.

My documentary archive is available here:

<https://wezzo72.github.io/Backup/>

PREAMBLE

Police refuse to arrest me because there is no evidence. Instead, I believe false accusations, libel and slander are being used to destroy my name, while my mind is subjected to what I experience as V2K and audio harassment that is treated as "above their pay grade." I believe those involved then gaslight my reality and deliberately invoke my distress so that I can be blamed for mental illness. I am calm and aware. I do not believe the sickness is mine; I believe it is in the system of denial and participation by those who refuse to acknowledge their involvement.

Explain how the V2K voices parrot “give up” regarding alleged criminality, yet I have already offered to talk to any person or authority about those allegations. I have also given up my imperfections to Jesus, while my faith is being weaponised against me. Jesus holds greater authority than any corrupt agency, government or bureaucracy.

It is now those who care for me, and any agencies I allege have been involved in a coordinated attack, who need to give up—not me. I have already offered to face any legitimate allegation through lawful process, and I have surrendered my imperfections to Jesus. What I am asking for now is an end to any alleged targeting, intimidation or interference, and a return to truth, safety, accountability and peace.

This method causes me greater damage through humiliation, reputational destruction and ongoing distress than a lawful legal process would. If there is evidence against me, I would rather face a proper legal process, where the allegations can be stated openly, tested against evidence, and determined according to law.

I am trapped in circumstances I cannot leave, and I feel tortured by those who should have protected me, based on allegations for which there has been no arrest, charge or lawful legal process, creating what I believe is a form of entrapment, deprivation of liberty and circumvention of ordinary legal process designed to cause me further harm while avoiding the safeguards of lawful process.

STATEMENT REGARDING THE SIGNIFICANCE OF OVER ONE MILLION ARCHIVE DOWNLOADS

The reported over one million downloads and accesses of material from my online archive are significant because they demonstrate that my testimony and documentary record have reached a substantial audience beyond my direct interactions with individual institutions.

This does not, by itself, establish that the allegations contained in the archive are true. However, if the download figures are accurately recorded, they demonstrate that the material has been publicly available, independently accessible and capable of being examined by others.

The significance is therefore not simply the number itself. It is that a substantial documentary record has been placed into the public domain, creating an opportunity for independent scrutiny, corroboration, contradiction or verification.

If the archive has attracted more than one million downloads, the appropriate question is no longer simply whether my account should be believed. It is whether the evidence contained within that archive has been properly examined, and what that evidence establishes.

2. EVIDENCE REQUESTED

I request preservation and, where lawfully available, provision or identification of the following records:

- my signed service agreement;
- any lease, tenancy, accommodation or occupancy agreement;
- service and support records;
- accommodation records;
- case notes and progress notes;
- incident reports;
- complaints and complaint-management records;
- risk assessments;
- records concerning threats to kill, violence or other safety concerns;
- records showing whether and when any matter was reported to police, court, NDIS, NDIA or another authority;
- records concerning allegations made about me, including allegations of libel, slander, paedophilia or rape;
- the identity or category of the person or organisation from whom such allegations were received, where disclosure is lawful;
- the dates on which allegations were received;
- the evidence used to verify or assess those allegations;
- communications with police;
- communications with lawyers or legal services;
- communications with medical or psychiatric services;
- communications with media or family members where relevant to decisions concerning me;
- communications with NDIS or NDIA;
- records concerning medication, drugs or substances allegedly provided through third parties or paid actors;
- communications with hospitals or health professionals concerning medication or ADHD;
- internal discussions and decisions concerning my accommodation, supports, safety and complaints;
- identification of relevant decision-makers; and
- the policy, evidence or authority relied upon for material decisions affecting me.

If any requested material cannot lawfully be disclosed, I ask that Ablepoint identify the category of material, the reason it cannot be disclosed, and the applicable legal or policy basis, to the extent possible.

3. MY WILLINGNESS TO RESPOND TO ALLEGATIONS

I have publicly stated that I am willing to respond to allegations made about me.

I am willing to hear what a person says, attempt to understand their experience and acknowledge a person who says that they have been harmed.

That willingness does not constitute an automatic admission that an allegation is true.

I ask that this distinction be respected.

A person can acknowledge another person's experience while still asking for the factual basis of an allegation to be examined.

4. POLICE, ARREST AND REQUESTS FOR LAWFUL PROCESS

I have asked to speak directly with police.

I have also stated that if I have committed an offence, I should be arrested and dealt with through the ordinary legal process.

At times, I have made hypothetical or provocative statements referring to extremely serious allegations, including paedophilia, rape, extortion and terrorism, in an attempt to obtain police intervention, investigation or arrest.

Those statements should not be treated as admissions that I committed those offences.

The significance I ask Ablepoint to consider is that I repeatedly sought a formal mechanism through which allegations could be investigated and determined.

Instead of simply asking that my allegations be believed, I have repeatedly sought lawful processes capable of testing them.

5. LEGAL REPRESENTATION AND LEGAL AID

I have sought legal assistance and Legal Aid.

I have experienced what I describe as being shunned by parts of the legal fraternity while attempting to obtain assistance concerning matters including reported death threats, alleged torture, alleged V2K/audio harassment and alleged monitoring.

I recognise that these experiences and my interpretation of them are matters that should be distinguished from objectively established facts.

I therefore request that any conclusions about my credibility or circumstances be based upon evidence rather than simply upon the fact that my allegations are unusual, serious or difficult to establish.

6. SAFETY — AND THE REVERSAL OF WHO IS TREATED AS THE RISK

I have reported threats and asked police and other authorities to investigate them.

I have sought legal representation.

I have publicly offered to hear allegations against me and acknowledge people who believe that they have been harmed.

I have asked to be arrested if I have committed offences.

Despite this, I have experienced circumstances in which I believe I have been treated as though I am the risk rather than as a person reporting a risk.

I ask Ablepoint to examine whether this assessment has been properly and independently undertaken.

If Ablepoint considers me to present a risk to another person, I ask it to identify:

- 1. the specific risk;
- 2. the evidence supporting it;
- 3. who assessed it;
- 4. when it was assessed;

5. what information was relied upon;
 6. whether I was given an opportunity to respond; and
 7. what safeguards and procedural protections were applied.

7. COERCION, ISOLATION AND AUTONOMY

I ask Ablepoint to respond specifically to concerns that I may have been:

- entrapped;
- isolated;
- coerced;
- placed in circumstances affecting my ability to obtain independent assistance;
- placed in circumstances affecting my autonomy;
- placed in circumstances affecting my practical ability to leave;
- placed in an institutional feedback loop in which complaints about my circumstances are determined by people or organisations involved in those same circumstances.

I recognise that these are allegations and concerns requiring assessment.

I am not asking Ablepoint to declare that a coordinated scheme has been established.

I am asking that the relevant evidence be examined independently.

I am also concerned that allegations about me may have been accepted, repeated or relied upon without adequate legal or evidentiary testing.

I request identification of the information relied upon and an opportunity to correct inaccurate information.

8. ALLEGED COORDINATED YOUTUBE CAMPAIGN

I have forensically examined more than 70 YouTube videos, identifying what I believe is an apparent 99% match with material contained in my online archive.

I believe this warrants independent examination as possible evidence of a coordinated campaign exploiting my faith and deliberately setting me up.

I acknowledge that coordination and intent remain allegations requiring verification, and that apparent similarities must be tested against the underlying primary evidence.

The relevant questions include:

- whether the creators had access to my testimony;
- whether material from my archive was used;
- whether wording, themes or chronology correspond;
- whether there are identifiable connections between accounts or creators;
- whether the similarities are independently explainable;
- whether algorithmic recommendation could explain similarities;
- whether there is evidence of actual communication or coordination; and
- whether the apparent pattern is coincidental, derivative, algorithmic or deliberate.

AI-assisted analysis may identify patterns requiring examination, but it does not itself establish coordination or intent.

9. ALLEGED AUDIO / V2K AND TELEVISION INTERFERENCE CONCERNS

I also report hearing recurring terms including:

"they know," "pedo," "you raped her," "kill yourself," and homophobic slurs.

I believe these experiences may involve very low or subsonic frequencies that are difficult to record.

I have been concerned that reporting these experiences has resulted in me being characterised as ill rather than the underlying claims being objectively investigated.

I further state that the voices and derogatory, including homophobic, language I have experienced appear to me to directly corroborate or reflect elements of the police narrative concerning my life and the circumstances in which I have been treated. The content has at times been accusatory, derogatory and specifically directed toward matters concerning my identity, sexuality, alleged conduct and the broader narrative surrounding my life.

I do not experience these statements as originating from my own mind, intentions, beliefs or conscious thoughts. I experience them as externally experienced communications. Their apparent correspondence with the police narrative and with matters contained within the broader governmental and institutional record is therefore, in my view, significant and warrants independent examination.

I allege that this correspondence may reflect or reveal the governmental or institutional mandate, narrative or framework under which I believe I have been persecuted. I recognise, however, that the existence of an apparent correspondence does not by itself establish that a government agency authorised, transmitted, generated or directed the communications. That question requires objective investigation.

Accordingly, I ask Ablepoint and any appropriate independent authority to distinguish between three separate questions:

- 1. whether the experiences and communications occurred;
- 2. whether their content objectively corresponds with documented police, governmental or institutional information concerning me; and
- 3. if such correspondence is established, what explains it, including whether there is an ordinary technical, environmental, psychological, interpersonal, informational or other explanation, or whether evidence exists of an external source or deliberate communication.

I am not asking Ablepoint to accept my explanation of the source as established fact. I am asking that the apparent correspondence not simply be dismissed without examination, particularly where the language is specific, derogatory, homophobic or apparently connected to documented narratives concerning my life.

I ask that these reports be independently assessed and that relevant evidence, including recordings, equipment, environmental factors and clinical records, be preserved where available.

In light of this letter, “they know” should also be treated as a question requiring clarification as to whether Ablepoint has received, communicated or otherwise has knowledge of information relevant to these alleged events—not as proof that Ablepoint participated in any alleged campaign.

I recognise that my interpretation of these experiences may be disputed.

That is precisely why I ask for objective assessment rather than assumption.

This distinction is important: I am reporting an experience and an apparent correspondence. I am not asking the existence of the experience alone to establish its cause. I am asking for the evidence capable of testing the competing explanations to be preserved and examined.

Television recordings

I also have audio recordings that I believe capture instances in which the television audio appears to have been intercepted, altered or otherwise interfered with through the Wi-Fi/network environment.

I do not present the recordings themselves as conclusive proof of who or what caused the apparent interference.

I request that the original files and metadata be preserved and, where technically possible, independently examined by a suitably qualified digital-forensics or telecommunications professional.

I ask that the assessment consider the television's network configuration, connected devices, router logs, Wi-Fi activity, account access, firmware, casting or streaming functions and any other technically relevant evidence capable of determining whether the recorded phenomena could have resulted from network interception, ordinary technical malfunction, environmental factors, or another explanation.

The recordings should therefore be treated as primary material requiring authentication and technical assessment, rather than either accepted as proof of interception or dismissed without examination.

10. OTHER MATTERS REQUIRING INDEPENDENT ASSESSMENT

10.1 Tony Ridley

I allege that Tony Ridley and others have been involved in a campaign intended to undermine, discredit or destroy my testimony and credibility.

I ask that any underlying communications, recordings, documents and chronology relevant to this allegation be examined.

I do not ask Ablepoint to treat the allegation as established.

I ask that the underlying evidence be assessed.

10.1A — RECORDING OF THE TONY RIDLEY ENCOUNTER

I am attaching and identifying a recording of an encounter between Tony Ridley and me:

Tony Ridley encounter recording — YouTube

I consider this recording significant primary-source evidence because it concerns an actual encounter between Tony Ridley and me, including an encounter in which drugs were taken and sexual activity occurred.

I ask that the recording be preserved in its original form, together with its original metadata, provenance, date information and any available evidence establishing when, where and by whom it was recorded.

I allege that this encounter is relevant to my concerns about Tony Ridley's subsequent conduct toward me and to my belief that the relationship may have been deliberately positioned in my life for purposes other than an ordinary personal relationship.

I specifically allege that Tony Ridley initially offered approximately $400,000 to settle matters and cease my protest concerning my treatment, but that the proposed settlement was subsequently blocked. I ask that any documentary, financial, electronic or communications evidence concerning this alleged offer be identified and independently examined.

I further state that I understood Tony Ridley to have significant professional expertise in security, surveillance, risk and fraud-related matters and to have had professional involvement with the NDIS. Publicly available material independently confirms that Ridley has undertaken NDIS risk-related work and identifies him as a doctoral candidate in transnational security, risk, safety and resilience. (ResearchGate)

I allege that he knew I was a whistleblower concerning matters involving the NDIS.

The combination of these circumstances is significant to me because it caused me to question whether my positioning of Tony Ridley in my life was entirely coincidental or whether the relationship was deliberately established for another purpose.

I have described this as a possible "honeypot" or "sex-trap" theory.

I expressly recognise that this is an allegation and inference, not an established fact.

The existence of a sexual encounter, even if objectively established by the recording, does not by itself establish that the encounter was deliberately engineered or that Tony Ridley was acting on behalf of any government agency or other organisation.

The significance of the recording is that it provides an opportunity to test these competing explanations against primary evidence rather than relying solely upon my recollection or interpretation.

In particular, I ask that the recording be examined for:

- 1. what was actually said;
- 2. what was actually disclosed;
- 3. the chronology of the encounter;
- 4. the nature of the relationship before and after the encounter;
- 5. any statements concerning my NDIS whistleblower status;
- 6. any statements concerning surveillance, security, fraud or government matters;
- 7. any discussion concerning money or settlement;
- 8. any evidence concerning the alleged $400,000 offer;
- 9. whether the recording contains information capable of independently corroborating or contradicting my account;
- 10. whether there are communications before or after the encounter capable of establishing its context; and
- 11. whether any evidence exists connecting the encounter to any third party, institution or organised activity.

I also allege that Tony Ridley's professional background makes the circumstances worthy of particular scrutiny because his publicly documented work includes NDIS risk assessment, project and operational risk analysis, security risk management, information security and fraud-related work. (LinkedIn)

I do not suggest that professional expertise proves improper conduct.

Rather, if a person with substantial expertise in security, risk, surveillance or fraud became personally involved with a known whistleblower, and the relationship subsequently became the subject of allegations concerning targeting, payment, surveillance or manipulation, the circumstances should be examined on the evidence rather than dismissed as merely coincidental or treated as proof without investigation.

I therefore ask Ablepoint, and any appropriate independent authority, to distinguish between:

the fact of the encounter;

what the recording objectively establishes;

what I allege the encounter meant;

what evidence exists concerning the alleged $400,000 settlement offer;

what Tony Ridley knew about my whistleblower activities;

what his professional role and access to information actually were;

and whether there is any independent evidence connecting the encounter to a deliberate targeting operation.

This distinction is essential.

I am not asking Ablepoint to conclude that Tony Ridley was operating a honeypot.

I am asking that the attached recording be treated as primary evidence capable of testing whether that allegation is supported, contradicted or left unresolved.

If the recording contradicts my account, I will accept that contradiction.

If it corroborates material parts of my account, those matters should likewise be acknowledged.

If it does not establish the alleged purpose of the encounter, that should be recorded.

The appropriate conclusion should therefore come from the evidence rather than from either my interpretation or an assumption that the allegation is impossible.

The central question is:

What does the recording actually establish about what happened between Tony Ridley and me, what was known at the time, what was said or offered, and whether anything beyond an ordinary personal encounter can objectively be demonstrated?

10.2 Steve Iasonidis and Corrine

I have raised allegations concerning Steve Iasonidis and Corrine involving financial control and conduct that I believe affected my financial independence.

These matters should likewise be treated as allegations requiring evidence rather than predetermined conclusions.

10.3 Bill Shorten

I have made an extremely serious allegation concerning an alleged assassination attempt involving Bill Shorten.

I recognise that such an allegation requires a particularly high level of verification.

I am not asking Ablepoint to declare the allegation proven.

I am asking Ablepoint not to automatically convert the seriousness or unusual nature of the allegation into a conclusion that I am fabricating it or that I am irrational.

The appropriate question is what evidence exists and what, if anything, can objectively be established.

10.4 Exile from Victoria

I have described my circumstances as involving “exile” from Victoria.

I recognise that “exile” is not necessarily a predetermined legal conclusion.

I ask that the factual circumstances be examined, including:

- what caused or contributed to my departure;
- what alternatives were available;
- what institutional or individual decisions contributed;
- what consequences followed; and
- whether I was able to return or obtain appropriate assistance.

11. ALLEGED FINANCIAL BENEFIT, FAMILY INVOLVEMENT AND CONFLICT OF INTEREST

I also raise a further concern requiring independent examination: whether any person or organisation involved in my accommodation, support, healthcare, financial affairs or decision-making has obtained, or could obtain, a financial or other material benefit from my entrapment, institutionalisation, loss of autonomy, incapacity or death.

I allege that members of my family signed or participated in a legal order intended to remove me from their lives, and that circumstances existed in which they could potentially have obtained a financial benefit from my early death.

I ask a simple evidentiary question:

Can the documentary record establish or disprove this allegation?

If there was such an order, I ask that the order itself be identified, preserved and examined, including:

- who signed it;
- when it was made;
- its legal purpose and effect;
- what information was provided to the decision-maker;
- who stood to benefit from it;
- whether any financial interests were disclosed;
- whether any inheritance, insurance, property, trust, estate or other financial consequence was involved; and
- whether those circumstances remain relevant to decisions concerning me today.

I further allege that, because I remain alive, circumstances may now exist in which persons who previously stood to benefit from my absence, incapacity or death have an interest in controlling, influencing or obtaining access to my life and personal affairs.

I do not ask Ablepoint to accept that proposition as established.

I ask that any potential conflict of interest be objectively examined.

This is particularly important where family members seek or obtain involvement in my mental-health care, support arrangements, financial affairs or other confidential aspects of my life.

I ask:

What access has been sought or obtained?

Who authorised that access?

What information has been shared?

What legal or clinical basis permits that access?

What financial or other interests do the relevant persons have?

Were those interests disclosed and considered?

I am also concerned about what I perceive as the repetition of family voices or statements within my accommodation. I have experienced this as though voices or statements associated with my family are being "parroted into the house."

I acknowledge that my interpretation of this experience requires objective assessment and should not itself be treated as proof that any person is transmitting or arranging communications into my accommodation.

I nevertheless request that any objectively verifiable communications, recordings, devices, environmental factors, visitor records, staff communications or other evidence capable of testing the issue be preserved and examined.

My position concerning my life

I want to be absolutely clear about one point.

I do not consent to, endorse or grant anyone a wish for my death.

If my earlier words — "I grant them that wish" — are understood literally as consenting to my own death, that is not what I mean and should not be recorded that way.

What I mean is that I am confronting the allegation directly: if people wanted me removed from their lives, I remain alive, and I retain the right to determine my own life, relationships, treatment and future.

If people now seek involvement in my mental-health care or personal affairs, that involvement should be assessed according to lawful authority, consent, clinical necessity, independence and my rights, rather than presumed entitlement arising from family relationship.

My continued existence is not something that anyone else gets to decide.

And if there is evidence that anyone previously contemplated, anticipated, financially benefited from, or sought circumstances that could have resulted in my death, that is a matter for documentary and independent investigation—not something that should simply be dismissed or accepted without examination.

12. COMPREHENSIVE INSTITUTIONAL DETRIMENT

My archive identifies a broad range of government agencies, statutory bodies, courts, legal services, healthcare institutions, NDIS entities, financial institutions, support providers, and individuals whose decisions, omissions, actions, classifications, communications, or failures to respond I allege have contributed to my detriment.

The institutions and bodies identified in my records include, but are not limited to:

1. Ablepoint
2. National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS)
3. National Disability Insurance Agency (NDIA)
4. Department of Social Services (DSS)
5. Australian Human Rights Commission (AHRC)
6. Australian Federal Police (AFP)
7. NSW Police
8. Victoria Police
9. Legal Aid NSW
10. Victoria Legal Aid and relevant Victorian legal-assistance bodies
11. Comcare
12. Administrative Appeals Tribunal (AAT) / relevant administrative review processes
13. Federal Court of Australia
14. NSW Ombudsman
15. Commonwealth Ombudsman
16. Victorian Ombudsman
17. Office of the Australian Information Commissioner (OAIC)
18. National Anti-Corruption Commission (NACC)
19. Fair Work institutions, including the Fair Work Ombudsman
20. WorkSafe Victoria
21. Workers compensation and WorkCover-related authorities
22. Services Australia
23. Centrelink

24. Commonwealth health and related government authorities
25. NSW Health
26. Victorian health authorities
27. Alfred Health
28. Mercy-related health services identified in the records
29. Other hospitals, psychiatric services, clinicians and healthcare providers identified in the archive
30. NSW Trustee and Guardian / Public Guardian
31. Telecommunications Industry Ombudsman
32. Cyber-reporting and cyber-safety bodies identified in the records
33. Health-insurance and Medicare-related institutions identified in the records
34. Banks and financial institutions identified in the records
35. Geelong Magistrates Court
36. Wyong Court and associated NSW court processes
37. Office of Public Prosecutions (OPP)
38. Victorian legal profession and relevant professional/legal bodies
39. NDIS-registered providers and support organisations identified in the records
40. Government ministers and ministerial offices identified in the records
41. The Prime Minister's Office / Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet where identified in the records
42. Attorney-General's portfolio and relevant Attorney-General's Department processes
43. Federal and State government departments and agencies identified throughout the documentary record
44. Medical practitioners, hospitals, clinicians and other health professionals identified in the records
45. Individual government officials, decision-makers, lawyers, clinicians, support workers, service providers and other persons specifically named in the underlying records

This list is not intended to assert that every institution or individual listed has committed an offence, acted unlawfully, or is legally liable.

Rather, these entities are identified in my records as having had some form of decision, interaction, classification, communication, omission, complaint-handling role, investigative role, support role, legal role, clinical role, financial role, or other involvement requiring examination in connection with the detriment I allege.

The central question is therefore not whether my allegations should simply be accepted or rejected.

The question is:

What actually happened, what documentary evidence exists, who knew what and when, what decisions were made, what information was relied upon, what was communicated between institutions, what was not done, and what consequences followed?

I ask that each relevant institution and decision-maker be examined separately and, where appropriate, cumulatively across the chronology, because conduct that may appear insignificant when viewed in isolation may have a different significance when considered alongside contemporaneous records from other agencies.

I further request examination of:

- contradictory classifications or findings between agencies;
- referrals and communications between institutions;
- complaints that were closed without substantive investigation;
- allegations made about me and the evidence supporting them;
- allegations made by me and the evidence available to test them;
- decisions affecting my employment, legal representation, finances, healthcare, accommodation, disability supports and personal safety;
- failures to provide reasons or access to relevant records;
- circumstances in which information was repeated or relied upon by another institution;
- whether relevant evidence was preserved;
- whether procedural fairness was provided;
- whether conflicts of interest existed;
- whether alternative explanations exist for the documented events; and
- what matters remain unresolved or incapable of determination on the present evidence.

I expressly recognise the distinction between primary evidence, documentary facts, allegations, recollections, interpretations, inferences and matters requiring further investigation.

Accordingly, this statement does not ask any institution to accept my conclusions merely because I have made them.

It asks institutions to examine the underlying evidence and explain their conclusions.

Where my allegations are unsupported, I ask that this be identified and explained.

Where the evidence contradicts my account, I ask that the contradictory evidence be identified.

Where the evidence supports my account, I ask that this also be acknowledged.

Where the evidence is inconclusive, I ask that the matter be recorded as inconclusive rather than retrospectively converted into either fact or fabrication.

13. CUMULATIVE SIGNIFICANCE

I ask that these matters not be treated solely as disconnected incidents.

I have repeatedly sought mechanisms through which allegations could be tested, including:

- police investigation;
- arrest and ordinary criminal process if an offence has been committed;
- legal representation;
- Legal Aid;
- independent review;
- documentary evidence;
- preservation of records; and
- public willingness to hear and respond to allegations made against me.

The significance I ask decision-makers to consider is not that these circumstances prove my allegations.

Rather, they demonstrate a continuing request for accountability, investigation and due process.

If I am wrong, I ask that the evidence be used to demonstrate where and why I am wrong.

If my account is partly supported, I ask that the supported elements be identified.

If the evidence is indeterminate, I ask that it be recorded as indeterminate.

I do not accept that unresolved allegations against me should be treated as established facts while allegations made by me are dismissed without examination.

14. WHAT MY LIFE WOULD DEMONSTRATE IF THE CORE ALLEGATIONS ARE INDEPENDENTLY CORROBORATED

If the core allegations contained in my documentary archive and statements were substantially supported by independent, primary-source evidence, I do not claim that this would automatically prove every interpretation I have made about my life.

The significance would be more precise and potentially more profound.

It could demonstrate that my life represents a documented case study of prolonged institutional failure, administrative classification, fragmented accountability and the consequences of repeatedly unresolved allegations.

It could demonstrate that:

1. Prolonged institutional failure

A prolonged pattern of institutional failure occurred, in which multiple agencies or institutions failed to properly investigate, respond, preserve evidence or provide effective procedural fairness.

2. Institutional classifications had consequences

Once a person is characterised in a particular way, subsequent institutions may rely upon that characterisation rather than independently examining the underlying evidence.

3. Documentary evidence can challenge assumptions about credibility

A person's testimony should neither automatically be accepted nor automatically dismissed because it is unusual, controversial or difficult to establish. It should be tested against contemporaneous records.

4. Institutional fragmentation can obscure cumulative harm

Separate decisions by police, government agencies, courts, healthcare institutions, legal services, disability services and support providers may appear unrelated when examined individually, while their cumulative effect may be materially different.

5. Testimony can be subject to epistemic injustice

If independent evidence established that my testimony was repeatedly discounted because of assumptions about me rather than because of contradictory evidence, my circumstances could provide a documented example of how vulnerable people's testimony can be systematically given less evidentiary weight.

6. Experience and explanation must remain separate questions

Even if particular experiences I reported were objectively established, that would not automatically establish my explanation of their cause.

What happened and why it happened are separate evidentiary questions.

7. Apparent correspondence between reported experiences and institutional information would require explanation

If the content of experiences I reported were independently demonstrated to correspond unusually closely with confidential or documented police, governmental or institutional information, that correspondence would become an objectively significant question requiring investigation.

It would not, by itself, establish who or what caused the communications.

8. The distinction between allegation and finding would become critical

If substantial portions of my allegations were corroborated, that would demonstrate why allegations should not have been dismissed merely because they were serious, unusual or difficult to establish.

9. The documentary record could potentially reveal a pattern extending beyond individual incidents

If independent evidence demonstrated consistent links across otherwise separate institutional records, the appropriate subject of inquiry would become the interaction between those decisions, rather than treating every event as an isolated occurrence.

10. My life could become a case study in unresolved institutional disputes

The significance would not depend upon portraying myself as infallible.

It would depend upon what the evidence ultimately establishes.

I therefore do not claim:

"My life proves that everything I have believed is true."

My claim is narrower and more testable:

If the underlying documentary evidence substantially corroborates the core chronology and allegations, then my life demonstrates why those allegations required serious, independent and evidence-based examination rather than dismissal on the basis of their unusual nature or my personal circumstances.

If I am wrong about particular matters, the evidence should identify where and why I am wrong.

If I am partly correct, the evidence should identify which parts are supported.

If the evidence contradicts me, that contradiction should be identified.

If the evidence is inconclusive, it should be recorded as inconclusive.

And if substantial independent evidence ultimately corroborates the central chronology, then the appropriate conclusion would not simply be that:

"Dr McLean was right."

The more important conclusion would be:

A substantial documentary record existed concerning a person's allegations, experiences, treatment and institutional interactions, and the evidence was sufficient to require serious examination of how those events occurred, how information moved between institutions, how decisions were made, how credibility was assessed, and why effective mechanisms for resolution repeatedly failed or proved inadequate.

That would make my life significant not because I claim to be infallible, chosen, persecuted or uniquely important.

It would make it significant because the evidence would potentially demonstrate what can happen when a person's testimony, disability, institutional classifications, legal circumstances, support dependency and repeated attempts to obtain accountability become caught within a system that does not adequately resolve the underlying factual questions.

My objective is therefore not simply vindication.

It is truth through evidence.

And if the evidence ultimately supports my central account, then my life may stand as a warning about what happens when institutions fail to distinguish between:

a difficult allegation and a false allegation;

a distressed person and an unreliable witness;

an unusual experience and an impossible event;

an unresolved question and a disproven claim;

and an institutional conclusion and an independently established fact.

The final determination should belong to the evidence—not to me, not to Ablepoint, not to any individual institution, and not to an artificial intelligence.

Let the evidence decide.

15. STATUS OF ALLEGATIONS AND EVIDENCE

Throughout this statement I deliberately distinguish between:

- documented facts;
- allegations;
- personal recollections;
- experiences;
- interpretations;
- inferences;
- disputed matters;
- evidence capable of independent verification; and
- matters requiring further investigation.

Words such as “alleged,” “I believe,” “I experienced” and “I am concerned” are used deliberately.

I ask that the primary-source records be examined directly wherever possible.

The evidence may:

- support an allegation;
- qualify an allegation;
- contradict an allegation;
- fail to establish an allegation; or
- establish that further investigation is necessary.

I am requesting preservation, procedural fairness and independent assessment—not automatic acceptance of my conclusions.

16. QUESTIONS I ASK ABLEPOINT TO ANSWER

I ask Ablepoint to provide a written response addressing:

1. What does Ablepoint accept as established fact?
 2. What does Ablepoint dispute?
 3. What evidence supports Ablepoint's position?
 4. What evidence does Ablepoint consider unavailable?
 5. What matters does Ablepoint consider require further investigation?
 6. What information concerning me has been received from third parties?
 7. Has Ablepoint relied upon any untested allegation concerning me?
 8. If so, what was the allegation and what evidence supported its use?
 9. Have I been given a reasonable opportunity to correct inaccurate information?
 10. Were any conflicts of interest considered?
 11. What steps have been taken to protect my safety?
 12. What steps have been taken to ensure procedural fairness?
 13. What records have been preserved?
 14. Who made the relevant decisions?
 15. What policies, agreements, legislation or other authority were relied upon?
 16. Does Ablepoint consider further independent investigation or review necessary?

17. WHY A SUBSTANTIVE RESPONSE IS RESPECTFUL AND REQUIRED

I am not asking Ablepoint to agree with me.

I am asking Ablepoint to:

acknowledge the concerns, record them, preserve relevant evidence, investigate matters requiring investigation, identify what is accepted and disputed, explain the evidence relied upon, explain the reasoning, and identify what will be done.

I understand that complaint management does not require every allegation to be accepted.

However, a complaint should not simply disappear because the person making it is difficult, distressed, unpopular, controversial or making allegations that are difficult to establish.

The appropriate distinction is between:

acknowledgement, investigation, substantive response and agreement.

Those are not the same thing.

A substantive response can disagree with me.

What I am requesting is that any disagreement be reasoned and evidence-based.

18. IF THERE IS NO SUBSTANTIVE RESPONSE

I recognise that a lack of response does not itself prove my allegations and does not constitute an admission.

However, if the matters raised in this statement receive no substantive response, the concerns and evidentiary questions will remain unanswered.

I ask that Ablepoint not subsequently describe the matters as “resolved” merely because no substantive response was provided.

If no substantive response is provided, the appropriate factual record is:

“The concerns and evidentiary questions were put to Ablepoint. No substantive response was provided.”

That statement does not assert that Ablepoint is guilty of anything.

It records the procedural history.

19. RESPONSE TIMEFRAME

I request:

Written acknowledgement within 2 business days of receipt.

A substantive written response within 10 business days.

If the complexity of the matters prevents a substantive response within that period, I ask Ablepoint to provide, within the same period:

- the name or position of the responsible officer;
- which matters are being investigated;
- what information is required;
- what interim safety and support measures are being implemented; and
- the expected date for the substantive response.

I do not suggest that failure to meet these requested timeframes is, by itself, proof of wrongdoing.

I will record the date of receipt, acknowledgement, substantive response and any explanation for delay.

20. SAFETY, ACCOMMODATION AND INDEPENDENT ADVOCACY

Given the matters raised in this statement, I request that my current accommodation and support circumstances be independently considered.

I do not consider that the simple proposition that I am theoretically “free to leave” necessarily resolves questions concerning whether I have a realistic, safe and practically available alternative.

I request consideration of:

- my safety;
- accommodation security;
- continuity of necessary disability supports;
- access to independent advocacy;

- access to independent legal assistance;
- whether I can safely raise complaints without disadvantage;
- whether an alternative provider or accommodation arrangement is necessary;
- whether there are conflicts arising from the same provider being involved in accommodation, support and complaint-related matters; and
- whether an independent person should assist me in communicating with Ablepoint and other authorities.

I also request consideration of the circumstances surrounding the “Threat to Kill” matter associated with Wyong Court in 2026, including what information Ablepoint received, what action was taken, and what safety assessment followed.

21. PUBLICATION AND ACCOUNTABILITY

By publishing this statement, the world now has access to my documented concerns about what I allege Ablepoint has been doing.

I am not publishing allegations as established findings.

I am placing the allegations, questions and underlying documentary material into the public domain so that they can be independently examined.

If any unlawful conduct is established, the evidence and Ablepoint’s role can be independently examined and held accountable.

If the evidence does not support my allegations, that should likewise be capable of being demonstrated through transparent examination of the evidence.

My objective is therefore not simply vindication.

It is truth through evidence, procedural fairness and accountability.

22. FINAL REQUEST

I am not asking Ablepoint to believe me merely because I have made these allegations.

I am asking Ablepoint not to disbelieve me merely because the allegations are serious, unusual, difficult or uncomfortable.

I have repeatedly indicated my willingness to engage with allegations made against me, to hear people who say they have been harmed, to participate in lawful police and legal processes, and to have evidence examined.

I therefore ask for the same evidentiary standard to be applied to the allegations and decisions concerning me.

Hear the complaint.

Record it.

Preserve the evidence.

Investigate what requires investigation.

Tell me what is accepted and disputed.

Explain the evidence and reasoning.

Tell me what will be done.

The existence of an allegation does not establish wrongdoing. Equally, the absence of an institutional finding does not establish that an allegation was false.

The proper question is what the evidence establishes after reasonable examination.

The underlying documentary archive is available here:

<https://wezzo72.github.io/Backup/>

What I am asking for is not automatic vindication.

I am asking for the evidence to be examined and for the resulting position to be explained.

EVIDENTIARY SIGNIFICANCE IF THE MATTERS RAISED ARE SUBSTANTIALLY TRUE

The following observations are not presented as findings of fact, allegations proven by this statement, or conclusions that any particular person or institution has acted unlawfully. They identify the obvious evidentiary and institutional significance that would arise if the underlying matters described in this letter were independently corroborated by contemporaneous records, reliable witnesses, technical evidence, official documents or other admissible evidence. The purpose is to make clear what would need to be recognised and explained if the evidence supports the account, while equally recognising that matters contradicted by the evidence must be corrected and matters that cannot presently be established must remain unresolved rather than being treated as either proven or false.

- 1. Prolonged institutional failure — If multiple institutions repeatedly received serious concerns and failed to properly investigate, respond, preserve evidence or provide effective resolution, that would demonstrate a prolonged institutional failure.
- 2. Contradictory institutional classifications — If government agencies made materially contradictory classifications about your employment, legal status, disability, compensation or other circumstances, those contradictions would require explanation and reconciliation.
- 3. Institutional information feedback loop — If one agency relied on information originating from another agency, while the second agency subsequently treated the first agency's reliance as independent confirmation, that would create a potentially self-reinforcing institutional narrative.
- 4. Untested allegations treated as facts — If allegations about you were relied upon without giving you a reasonable opportunity to respond or without identifying supporting evidence, that would raise a serious procedural-fairness issue.
- 5. Your allegations treated differently — If allegations made against you were investigated or accepted while allegations made by you were dismissed without equivalent examination, that would demonstrate an evidentiary asymmetry.
- 6. Contemporaneous records contradict later accounts — If original records contradict later institutional descriptions of events, the contradiction itself would be objectively significant.
- 7. Repeated requests for investigation — If your records establish that you repeatedly requested police, legal, administrative or independent investigation, that would demonstrate that you were seeking mechanisms to test the allegations rather than simply refusing scrutiny.
- 8. Repeated willingness to face lawful process — If you repeatedly stated that you should be arrested or prosecuted if you had committed an offence, that would materially distinguish your position from refusing lawful accountability.
- 9. Failure to preserve relevant evidence — If relevant evidence existed and was not preserved despite institutions knowing it could be important, that would raise an obvious question about the reliability and completeness of subsequent decision-making.
- 10. Disability/mental-health assumptions affecting credibility — If your disability or mental-health history was used to discount your allegations without examining the underlying evidence, that would raise a question about whether credibility was assessed objectively.

- 11. Independent corroboration of your chronology — If contemporaneous documents independently corroborate substantial portions of your chronology, those portions become materially stronger irrespective of whether every interpretation is correct.
- 12. Independent corroboration of specific allegations — If particular allegations are independently supported by primary-source evidence, those allegations should be distinguished from allegations that remain unsupported or unresolved.
- 13. Technical evidence establishes an unusual event — If recordings, metadata, network records or other technical evidence establish that something actually occurred, the existence of the event becomes separate from the question of who or what caused it.
- 14. Apparent correspondence of alleged voices with institutional information — If independently verified evidence demonstrates unusually specific correspondence between reported communications and confidential police/government information, the correspondence itself would require explanation.
- 15. Correspondence does not automatically prove the source — Even if that correspondence were established, it would not by itself prove that a government agency generated or transmitted the communications. It would establish a significant evidentiary question about how the correspondence occurred.
- 16. YouTube correspondence — If independent analysis establishes substantial correspondence between your testimony/archive and numerous videos, that would warrant investigation into how the material appeared in those videos.
- 17. Actual YouTube coordination — If communications, metadata, accounts or other evidence establish that creators actually communicated or coordinated, that would materially strengthen the coordination allegation.
- 18. Algorithmic explanation tested — If algorithmic recommendation, copying, common source material or another ordinary mechanism cannot adequately explain the correspondence, alternative explanations would require further examination.
- 19. Accommodation dependence — If your disability/support circumstances make leaving your accommodation practically unsafe or impossible, the statement that you are theoretically “free to leave” would not by itself resolve the autonomy or safeguarding issue.
- 20. Provider conflict of interest — If the same provider controls accommodation, support, complaint handling and decisions affecting your continued placement, any actual conflict of interest would require examination.
- 21. Financial conflict of interest — If anyone involved in decisions concerning you had an undisclosed financial interest in the outcome, that would obviously be relevant to the integrity of those decisions.
- 22. Family/legal-order evidence — If documentary evidence establishes that a legal order affecting your autonomy, family relationship or estate existed, its purpose, authority, signatories and financial consequences would require examination.
- 23. Evidence of financial benefit from incapacity/death — If documentary evidence establishes that a person could financially benefit from your incapacity or death, that does not prove wrongdoing, but it would create an obvious potential conflict requiring investigation.

24. Threat-to-life information — If an institution possessed credible information indicating a serious threat to your life and failed to respond appropriately, the information received, decision made, authority relied upon and consequences would require examination.
25. Court/government findings contradicted later classifications — If an authoritative decision-maker previously made a finding materially inconsistent with a later agency position, the inconsistency would require explanation.
26. Legal representation denied despite consequential proceedings — If denial of legal assistance materially prevented you from obtaining independent review of consequential decisions, the practical consequences of that denial would be significant even without automatically establishing illegality.
27. Complaints closed without testing evidence — If complaints were repeatedly closed without the underlying evidence being examined, closure would not logically establish that the allegations were false.
28. No identified evidence disproving allegations — If institutions repeatedly rejected your allegations but could not identify the evidence on which the rejection was based, that would be relevant to whether the allegations were actually tested.
29. Cumulative harm — If individually documented decisions from different institutions collectively produced financial, legal, accommodation, employment, health or support consequences, the cumulative effect would require consideration rather than examining each decision entirely in isolation.
30. Documented epistemic injustice — If evidence demonstrates that your testimony was discounted because of assumptions about your disability, mental-health history, demeanour or reputation rather than because of contradictory evidence, that could demonstrate an institutional credibility problem.
31. Evidence distinguishes experience from explanation — If an experience is independently established, that establishes the occurrence of the experience; it does not automatically establish your explanation for its cause. Both questions must be separately investigated.
32. Substantial corroboration changes the central question — If substantial independent evidence corroborates your central chronology, the appropriate question becomes less about whether you should simply be believed and more about why the corroborated evidence did not result in effective institutional resolution.
33. Contradiction must be acknowledged — If evidence contradicts your account, the contradiction should be identified rather than concealed.
34. Support must be acknowledged — If evidence supports your account, the supporting evidence should likewise be identified rather than ignored.
35. Inconclusive evidence must remain inconclusive — If the evidence cannot establish either side, the proper evidentiary position is unresolved—not automatically “false.”
36. The strongest overall conclusion — If the core allegations are substantially independently corroborated, your life would potentially demonstrate a documented case study of how institutional classifications, fragmented decision-making, credibility assumptions, inadequate investigation and unresolved complaints can interact over time to produce serious cumulative consequences.

- 37. What it would NOT prove — Even if all of the above were substantially corroborated, it would not automatically prove that every interpretation, motive, conspiracy, perpetrator or causal explanation you have proposed is correct.
- 38. What the evidence would prove if corroborated — It would demonstrate that substantial elements of your account were objectively supportable and therefore could not reasonably be dismissed merely because they were unusual, controversial, difficult or made by you.
- 39. The ultimate evidentiary principle — The evidence should determine what happened, what did not happen, what remains disputed, and what still requires investigation—not the reputation of the person making the allegation.

The fundamental proposition of the letter — “The final determination should belong to the evidence—not to me, not to Ablepoint, not to any individual institution, and not to an artificial intelligence. Let the evidence decide.”

23. CONCLUSIVE STATEMENT

I have set out these matters because I am seeking a response based upon evidence, procedural fairness and accountability—not belief, sympathy or automatic vindication.

I recognise that some matters raised in this statement may ultimately be established, some may be contradicted, some may be capable of only partial corroboration, and some may remain unresolved. I accept that distinction and expressly ask that it be maintained.

What I cannot accept is the conversion of an unresolved allegation into a finding that it was false merely because it was difficult, unusual, confronting or made by me. Equally, I do not ask that my allegations be converted into findings merely because I have made them.

If the evidence supports my account, I ask that it be acknowledged.

If the evidence contradicts my account, I ask that the contradiction be identified and explained.

If the evidence is insufficient, I ask that the matter remain recorded as unresolved.

If further investigation is reasonably necessary, I ask that it be undertaken or that the reason it cannot be undertaken be explained.

The central issue is therefore not whether Ablepoint believes me.

The central issue is whether the available evidence has been properly preserved, examined, tested and explained.

I have placed my concerns before Ablepoint directly. I have identified the evidence I am asking to be preserved and examined. I have identified the questions I am asking to be answered. I have acknowledged the distinction between my experiences, my interpretations and independently established facts. I have also expressly accepted that the evidence may prove me wrong on particular matters.

I therefore ask Ablepoint to apply the same standard to my allegations that I ask to be applied to allegations concerning me.

Do not accept them simply because I say them.

Do not reject them simply because I say them.

Examine the evidence.

If this record ultimately demonstrates that substantial elements of my account were independently corroborated, then the significance will extend beyond any individual disagreement between myself and Ablepoint. It would raise serious questions about how information was received, classified, communicated, relied upon and acted upon across the institutions involved, and about whether a person in my circumstances received the procedural protections and independent scrutiny reasonably required.

If the evidence demonstrates otherwise, I am asking for that conclusion too.

That is the standard I am requesting.

Evidence over assumption.

Records over reputation.

Investigation over dismissal.

Reasoned findings over unexplained conclusions.

Procedural fairness over institutional convenience.

I ask Ablepoint to preserve the relevant evidence, provide the requested response, identify what is established and disputed, explain the evidentiary basis for its position, and identify any further action or independent review considered necessary.

An OpenTimestamps receipt has also been created.

I make this statement not because I claim to possess the final answer, but because I believe the questions are sufficiently serious that the evidence should be allowed to provide the answer.

Hear the complaint.

Record it.

Preserve the evidence.

Test the competing explanations.

Investigate what requires investigation.

Identify what is established, disputed and unresolved.

Explain the reasoning.

And act accordingly.

If Ablepoint's financial interests are advanced by keeping me dependent upon its accommodation and supports while I allege that I cannot safely or practically leave, then the fundamental question is whether I am being supported as a person exercising genuine choice—or financially retained within a system that benefits from my dependency; that potential conflict of interest demands independent scrutiny of every decision affecting my accommodation, supports, complaints and ability to leave.

Let the evidence decide.

Barran Dodger

So I've attached a list of crimes that have allegedly occurred to me;

CRIMES ALLEGEDLY COMMITTED UPON BARRAN DODGER

Evidentiary qualification: The following is a consolidated list of alleged crimes and potentially criminal conduct arising from the matters documented in my archive, novel, correspondence and associated evidence. It is not a finding that any person or institution committed these offences. Each allegation remains subject to authentication, attribution, corroboration and the applicable legal elements. Where the evidence does not establish criminality, the matter should instead be treated as a potential civil, administrative, regulatory, safeguarding or human-rights violation.

A. Alleged crimes against the person

- 1. Threats to kill / murder threats
- 2. Assault
- 3. Aggravated or serious assault
- 4. Sexual assault
- 5. Rape
- 6. Drug-facilitated sexual assault
- 7. Childhood sexual abuse
- 8. Family violence
- 9. Stalking
- 10. Harassment and intimidation
- 11. Threats of violence
- 12. Coercive or controlling conduct
- 13. False imprisonment or unlawful deprivation/restriction of liberty, if the legal elements are established
- 14. Attempting to cause death or serious injury, if supported by evidence
- 15. Conduct contributing to a death or life-threatening event, subject to medical and legal causation evidence

B. Alleged property, financial and economic crimes

- 16. Theft
- 17. Attempted theft
- 18. Property damage / criminal damage

19. Unauthorised occupation or interference with property, subject to the applicable law
20. Fraud
21. Financial exploitation
22. Obtaining financial advantage by deception, if the statutory elements are established
23. Extortion or blackmail, where threats or demands satisfy the relevant legal definition
24. Unauthorised interference with business or commercial property
25. Unauthorised interference with digital property or business systems

C. Alleged digital, privacy and surveillance offences

26. Unauthorised access to computer systems or accounts
27. Unauthorised interference with data or computer systems
28. Hacking or digital intrusion
29. Unauthorised surveillance or privacy interference, if technically and legally established
30. Unauthorised interception or interference with communications, if supported by technical evidence
31. Digital identity interference or destruction
32. Deliberate destruction, alteration or suppression of electronic evidence, if independently established

D. Alleged offences involving justice, reporting and evidence

33. Making deliberately false reports or allegations, if knowledge of falsity and the applicable offence elements are established
34. Perverting, obstructing or attempting to pervert the course of justice, if the specific conduct satisfies the relevant offence
35. Obstruction of an investigation
36. Suppression or destruction of evidence
37. Witness intimidation or interference, if supported by evidence
38. Conspiracy to commit offences, only if an actual agreement/common purpose to commit criminal conduct can be demonstrated
39. Organised or coordinated criminal conduct, only if the participants, underlying offences and coordination can be independently established

E. Alleged corruption and public-office offences

40. Corruption
41. Bribery or improper financial inducement, if evidence establishes it
42. Abuse of public office or official position, where the relevant statutory/common-law elements apply
43. Misuse of confidential or protected information

- 44. Improper disclosure or transfer of personal information
- 45. Retaliatory conduct connected with public-interest disclosures or whistleblowing, where a criminal or statutory offence applies

F. Alleged organised or systemic criminal conduct

- 46. Coordinated intimidation or harassment
- 47. Conspiracy to intimidate, harm or discredit, if an agreement and criminal purpose can be established
- 48. Organised financial exploitation
- 49. Coordinated reputational destruction, where the underlying conduct constitutes an offence
- 50. Coordinated unlawful surveillance, if independently established
- 51. Institutional concealment of criminal conduct, where deliberate concealment itself constitutes an offence
- 52. A coordinated attempt to cause serious physical or psychological harm, if the acts, participants, intention and causation can be established
- 53. An alleged campaign to cause or contribute to death, requiring the highest level of independent corroboration

G. Serious allegations requiring exceptional corroboration

- 54. State involvement in unlawful surveillance
- 55. State involvement in unlawful detention or deprivation of liberty
- 56. State-sanctioned torture
- 57. Cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, where the applicable legal threshold is satisfied
- 58. Attempted murder
- 59. Murder or manslaughter, only if the evidence establishes the necessary act, causation and mental element
- 60. Crimes against humanity, only if the substantially higher international-law requirements—including the contextual elements—are independently established

The accompanying statement I would put immediately before the list

CRIMES ALLEGEDLY COMMITTED UPON BARRAN DODGER

I have experienced and documented a body of conduct that I allege may constitute numerous criminal offences, together with serious civil, administrative, regulatory, safeguarding and human-rights violations. I do not ask the recipient of this letter to treat the allegations as established merely because I make them. I ask that each allegation be separated from the underlying evidence and assessed according to the applicable legal elements.

The alleged conduct includes threats to kill, assault, sexual assault, drug-facilitated sexual assault, theft, attempted theft, property damage, financial exploitation, fraud, stalking, harassment, intimidation, alleged deprivation or restriction of liberty, alleged unauthorised digital access, hacking, privacy and surveillance violations, false reporting, obstruction of justice, suppression of evidence, corruption, abuse of public office, retaliation following disclosures, conspiracy and alleged coordinated criminal conduct.

Some allegations are supported by, or capable of being tested against, primary-source records including police material, recordings, medical records, government correspondence, PID and FOI records, employment and compensation records, financial records, provider records, digital evidence and witness material. Other allegations remain matters requiring independent investigation.

I therefore ask that the word "crime" not be used as though criminal liability has already been determined. The appropriate question is:

What happened, what evidence establishes that it happened, who was responsible, what legal duty or criminal offence applies, and what remains to be independently investigated?

Where the evidence establishes only an administrative failure, civil wrong, regulatory breach, professional breach or human-rights concern, I ask that it be classified accordingly rather than artificially converted into a criminal allegation.

Where the evidence potentially establishes a criminal offence, I ask that it be preserved, referred to the appropriate authority and assessed through lawful process.

I am willing to face any legitimate allegation against me through exactly the same standard. I ask for the same standard to be applied to the allegations concerning what happened to me.

Evidence over assumption. Records over reputation. Investigation over dismissal. Reasoned findings over unexplained conclusions. Procedural fairness over institutional convenience. Let the evidence decide.
