

THE VERSION OF ME YOU ABUSED NO LONGER EXISTS

By Barran Dodger

A First-Person Declaration of Transformation, Power, and Final Separation

The version of me you abused no longer exists.

Not weakened.

Not waiting.

Not wounded in the way you remember.

Gone.

So stop expecting mercy from a person I had to bury just to survive.

Let that sit with you — not gently, but like a weight in your gut.

Because everything you thought I would tolerate forever...
everything you believed I would keep excusing... everything you assumed I would keep absorbing...

ended.

Here is the truth you never had the courage to face:

You were never afraid of losing me.

You were afraid of me finding myself.

You were afraid of the moment I would rise out of everything you buried me under — the gaslighting, the minimisation, the distortion, the quiet erosion of my identity — and realise that I was never what you told me I was.

You feared the day I would stop begging for peace and start embodying power.

That day is not coming.

That day is here.

I did not simply change.

I transformed.

While you were still engaging with an outdated, diminished, compliant version of me — a version that existed only to accommodate your comfort —

I was rebuilding from the ground up.

Not in soft, aesthetic ways.

Not in ways designed to be palatable or easily accepted.

This was not a phase.

This was reconstruction.

A complete internal rewrite.

No performance.

No illusion.

No spiritual theatrics.

Just discipline.

Just awareness.

Just relentless, uncompromising alignment with truth.

This is not about emotion.

This is about structure.

I rewrote my internal code.

And once that code changed — access changed.

Permanently.

You do not get to reconnect with a system that no longer runs your influence.

There is no reset point.

There is no version rollback.

There is no entry.

Call it ego if that helps you cope.

Call it arrogance.

Call it distance.

Call it whatever language allows you to avoid accountability.

But beneath all of that, you know exactly what this is.

This is power.

Not performative power.

Not reactive power.

Sovereign power.

Understand this clearly:

I did not become the villain.

I stopped playing the fool in a system designed for me to lose.

I stopped extending grace to people who converted it into leverage.

I stopped mistaking endurance for strength.

And when I stopped—

everything shifted.

Yes, it made people uncomfortable.

It was meant to.

Because comfort, in that environment, was built on my self-abandonment.

So sit in the silence where my forgiveness used to exist.

Feel the absence.

Not as punishment —
but as consequence.

Because this is not revenge.

This is alignment.

NUMBER ONE: I BECAME THE GATE

There was a time I stood outside everything.

Waiting.

Offering.

Trying to earn entry into spaces that required me to diminish myself.

I believed proximity required sacrifice.

I believed acceptance required compromise.

I believed love required self-erasure.

I was wrong.

I was not breaking.

I was sharpening.

And when the shift came, it did not look like collapse.

It looked like clarity.

I stopped knocking.

I became the gate.

And now the same people who controlled access are standing outside it.

Confused.

Offended.

Locked out.

NUMBER TWO: MY “NO” BECAME FINAL

My “no” used to come wrapped in apology.

Now it arrives without negotiation.

Calm.

Precise.

Unmovable.

Because it is no longer rooted in fear.

It is rooted in self-recognition.

I am no longer available for dynamics that require me to override my own internal signals.

Every “no” is now an act of self-preservation.

Every refusal is a restoration of balance.

This is not rejection.

This is reclamation.

NUMBER THREE: I BUILT INTERNAL DEFENCE

I did not just heal.

I fortified.

What I went through required more than reflection.

It required reconstruction.

I analysed patterns.

I identified manipulation.

I dismantled internal vulnerabilities that were exploited repeatedly.

And I replaced them with boundaries that do not bend under pressure.

Now, the same tactics that once reached me—fail.

Not because they stopped being used.

But because I stopped being accessible to them.

NUMBER FOUR: I BECAME A MIRROR

I did not push people away.

I removed distortion.

And when the distortion disappeared,
so did their ability to avoid themselves.

My clarity reflects what people are unwilling to confront.

My silence exposes what my explanations used to protect.

And that reflection is not comfortable.

But it is accurate.

NUMBER FIVE: I STOPPED SACRIFICING MYSELF

There was a time I absorbed everything.

Emotion.

Conflict.

Instability.

I carried what was not mine.

I managed what I did not create.

I endured what I should have rejected.

That ends here.

I no longer bleed to maintain someone else's comfort.

I no longer reduce myself to sustain dysfunctional systems.

If that is perceived as cruelty—

so be it.

NUMBER SIX: I NO LONGER SEEK VALIDATION

I am no longer asking to be chosen.

I am evaluating what deserves access.

This is not ego.

This is calibration.

I do not chase alignment.

I recognise it.

And if it is absent—

I withdraw.

Immediately.

Without explanation.

Without apology.

NUMBER SEVEN: I CHOSE MYSELF

This is where everything changed.

Because the system depended on me choosing others at my own expense.

The moment I reversed that—the system broke.

They called it selfish.

They called it betrayal.

But it was neither.

It was correction.

I did not abandon anyone.

I stopped abandoning myself.

FINAL DECLARATION

This was never about becoming someone new.

This was about returning to who I was before I was conditioned to accept less.

Before I was taught to tolerate harm.

Before I was trained to confuse survival with connection.

I did not evolve for approval.

I evolved for truth.

So let them speak.

Let them misinterpret.

Let them construct narratives that protect their version of events.

It does not matter.

Because I am no longer participating in systems that require my silence to function.

I am no longer available for distortion.

I am no longer accessible through guilt.

I am no longer defined by what I tolerated.

I am defined by what I refused to continue.

And if that version of me is unrecognisable to you—that is not my failure.

That is your distance from the truth of who I became.

Let them talk.

Let them resist.

Let them choke on it.