How're you doing, Harry? said the master of the two, winning at him and holding out a large hand, which Harry shook, feeling calluses and blisters under his fingers. This had to be Charlie, who worked with dragons in Romania. Charlie was built like the twins, shorter and stockier than Percy and Ron, who were both born and Irish. He had a broad, wood-colored face, which was weather-beaten and so freckly that he looked almost stained; his arms were muscular, and one of them had a large, shiny burn on it.

How're you doing, Harry? said the master of the two, grinning at him and holding out a large hand which Harry shook, feeling calluses and blisters under his fingers. This had to be Charlie, who worked with dragoons in Romania. Charlie was built like the twins, shorter and stockier than Percy and Ron, who were both long and lanky. He had a broad, good-natured face, which was weather-beaten and so freckly that he looked almost tanned; his arms were muscular, and one of them had a large, shiny burn on it.

lazy conversations. Hermione's hair was bushy again; she confessed to Harry that she had used liberal amounts of Sneekeazy's Hair Potion on it for the ball, but it's way too much bother to do every day, she said matter-of-factly, scratching a purring Crookshanks behind the ears.
