Dear Minister Natasha MacLaren-Jones,

I am writing to you because my current living situation is unsustainable. As a pensioner, I receive $500 weekly, but I am forced to spend $300 of that on accommodation, leaving me with insufficient funds to cover my basic needs. I also have a disability and am under the National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS).

Despite my situation, I am unable to email, call, or get a message through to appropriate channels for help. There are two professional reports that highly recommend Supported Independent Living Services (SILS) accommodation for me, but Kel Graham from the NDIS has blocked this, in breach of professional recommendations. Notably, Kel Graham has no mental health training.

I have experienced homelessness and lived in my car as a rejected whistleblower. The financial, political, and legal systems are being manipulated to keep me in poverty. Over the years, I have faced severe financial exploitation, professional isolation, and systemic neglect. Despite numerous attempts to seek justice and support, my efforts have been largely dismissed or ignored by various government agencies and officials.

Furthermore, the government is in breach of the United Nations Human Rights Charter for Disabled People by not providing me with adequate housing or legal help. I sent a letter of demand to Danny Pearson, the Workplace Minister, but he has neglected to respond. I also tried to admit to a $125,000 fraud I committed against Centrelink, but the DSS Minister Ray Griggs neglected to investigate me because it would have brought my former partner, Stefan Iasonidis, into the equation. Stefan owes me a $500,000 settlement, and the government appears to be protecting him.

Additionally, the Minister for the NDIS and his CEO have acted in collusion with the police, health services, Free Living Australia, and the crisis team to intimidate me with threats of hospitalization and ten years in jail. This coordinated effort forced me to flee Victoria, and I now live in exile as a refugee in New South Wales and an asylum seeker within the same democracy where I am a citizen.

I am requesting your intervention to address this unsustainable financial burden and to ensure that I receive fair treatment and support.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,
Barran Dodger (Dr. Richard McLean)
