

Two things: I'm no one and nothing and utterly meaningless of no consequence but shit crazy yet still one of god's children, or, on the opposite spectrum of things, I'm the return of the christ consciousness the bible promised. Either way the results are the same: That I intend no harm on anyone. And I forgive everyone who ever wronged me and also myself.

Why focus on an evil conspiracy to kill that does not serve me? The choice is easy to act with divinity and gently let the things go and that it happens with great ease for my highest happiness and my greatest pleasure.

In each scenario where I am utterly polar opposites of either nothing and no body and of zero consequence and alternately and in absolute opposite I embody the return of christ to hearts in peace on earth makes no matter what you believe. This is my personal Jesus story of being in love with everything and I am not answerable to any one person institution government club or organisation but simply the true nature of my god given divine resonance with divine loving and ultimately all compassionate and forgiving gentle and powerful sentience.

I think it's pretty good. I think it's a real tipping point, for me, for everyone who ever acted to harm me. I see you. Your flaws and neglect and malice and intention toil as an allegory. You only wanted what I wanted that you saw it taken from me. Self preservation is not a bad thing. Everything in nature has it. I forgive you. I forgive myself. I forgive myself absolutely. This is going to be great.

It's a tangled web of injustices that I find myself ensnared in—a rejected whistleblower without legal recourse, facing a criminal record and denied access to crucial information. Coupled with my former partner's ties to ASIO and the systematic disregard from every government agency, it's clear that I'm predestined to lose systemically and politically and also likely financially at every turn.

With chronic schizophrenia and ADHD, compounded by a brain impairment from a fatal suicide attempt, I'm left wondering about the trajectory of my life. The options seem grim: either succumb to insanity and end up in an asylum, or be framed for a crime as retribution for speaking out, resulting in imprisonment as a convenient solution to my homelessness. Otherwise let the gang stalkers win and the desperation and persecution envelop me and suicide as is the intention from a designed poverty and the utter destruction and redaction of all your prosperity, desecration of your human and legal rights having already been deceived and persecuted to death revived and only to be forsaken, to only arrive at death's door again via an intelligent design that the world is utterly on board with.

The notion of a terrorist attack is commonly understood as an act of senseless violence and sheer madness, characterised by the indiscriminate killing of innocent people. However, my personal plight reflects a more disturbing reality that parallels yet differs from this concept in crucial ways. In my case, I find myself driven to contemplate suicide as a direct response to the relentless and brutal victimization and persecution that I endure—a scenario that seems to have tacit approval from society at large. This isn't an indiscriminate act of violence but a targeted one, where the mechanisms of my societal and political environment are fully engaged in what can only be described as a campaign aimed at my destruction.

Unlike the random victims of a terrorist attack, my potential demise appears to be a calculated outcome, almost expected and accepted by those within my social and political circles. The fact that my suffering and potential death are seen as foreseeable and even rational within these contexts points to a deeply ingrained malice and systemic failure. This targeted persecution transforms my plight into a sanctioned killing, with societal complicity making it all the more chilling.

The lack of meaningful intervention or any semblance of care towards my situation underscores a profound societal disregard for my wellbeing. It's as though the collective decision has been made to ignore my suffering, which in itself could be seen as an act of malice. The absence of action, the silence in response to my distress, effectively acts as an endorsement of the suffering inflicted upon me. This societal stance shifts the narrative from mere neglect to active disdain—a disturbing reality where the failure to act reveals a deeper, more insidious intent to harm.

This conspiracy seeks to strip me of my voice, my agency, and my very humanity. It's a concerted effort to silence dissent and maintain the status quo, even if it means destroying lives in the process. The fear of accountability drives those involved to extreme measures, leaving me isolated and powerless in the face of overwhelming adversity.

Perhaps it's time to disengage from what no longer serves me, to accept the harsh reality of my situation, and to find a way to exist within the confines of this persecution. Despite the multitude of enemies aligned against me, I refuse to be silenced. My commitment to exposing corruption and fighting for justice remains unwavering, even in the face of insurmountable odds.

I guess I can say with conviction that I know who I am. I'm not answerable to any government, any company, any religion, any agency, or any club, or any family, or any group of friends, or a club. I'm just me, and I know exactly what I am. My imperfect mistakes, which I've um tried to have atonement for with society, and I can say with conviction that I absolutely am at peace, and I'm absolutely content with who I am and what I've done. While it's true I haven't been a saint or perfect, and my beautiful mistakes have carved out my life as amazing imbalances and points of conflict that have really rendered this story, linked to the conspiracy in my public profile, that I find there is an amazing, amazing sense of spirit in that I've been beaten many, many, many, many times, but I'm never beat, and that in itself is reason to celebrate.

I'm surviving. I'm alive. I deserve to be here, I deserve to be here, and I want to be here, and I want to serve the community in a way that I've already demonstrated that I can do, and I'll continue to work towards those goals, but in actual fact I just may have to take a back seat on this advocacy and this conspiracy, because as corrupt as all government agencies are, and all politicians are, and all public officials are, and all ombudsmen are, and all police are, and all health care workers, and all of my friends and family who have allowed Steve Iasonidis to get away with this, and who have neglected to intervene in what they would reasonably expect that they have provisions for if a similar thing happened to them.

So what I can say is this is a biblical kind of forsaking. Every single person in my world is pitted against me, neglecting to act, vilifying me for mental illness, whether it's present or not, and has, like the federal government, excommunicated me from their lives for the very reason of people, most people, agree to be ruled by the powers that be and are followers. Most people are followers with their blinkers on, and they will appease the tyrannical government as long as their little piece of prosperity and luxury and money and human rights and their enjoyment of life is never touched, unlike they have witnessed it has been enacted on me. And because of this, this biblical forsaking that's excommunicated me from the government and excommunicated me from my family and excommunicated me from all my friends, I find I'm utterly and totally isolated, but I've never felt alone.

And although I might have been angry at certain times and through this conspiracy, it is the case that really, at times, I really do enjoy my life, and I really do find contentment with just simply existing with my beautiful companion crystal, man's best friend, and dog spelled backwards is God, and I've never felt so close to God than I do right now. The cosmic synchronicities, the meaningful coincidences, which have spiritual significance, are really miracles that happen to me all the time and frequently, and I'm extremely blessed for my life. And I'm grateful for my existence. I chose to be here. And God put me back here after the fatal injury. So I feel like I've got a reason to live. And I've got a reason to exist.

Sometimes, the things that are important in life, aren't money, or prestige, or status, or power. Because when you have those things, you've always got to play by the rules. And you've got to act within the remit of your role, in order to appease the very same tyrannical rule that pay your wage, and pay you hush money, in order to disengage me, excommunicate me, and in order to de-legitify my experience and my evidence. And that's been a profoundly systemic and political thing, right across the board.

This conspiracy doesn't serve me. I'm banging my head up against the wall. So I had a cosmic exchange today with a beautiful lady. And she said to me, whatever doesn't serve you, just let it go. And I really had an epiphany. And right now, there's a chill going up my spine, in that why would I place focus on something that doesn't serve me. So I've really reached a pivotal point in my journey, as a rejected whistleblower, and as a scapegoat. And I think one of the things that I need to do is to forgive. Because I do try to embody the Christ consciousness, which is coming back to the planet. And he's here. And it's good news.

You might call me crazy. And I know you will. But I embody the Christ consciousness, because I've got a God self, which is synonymous, and resonant with the enormity and omnipresence of the God. And every living thing, seen enemy, atom, quark, echidna, has the God self contained within it. And unfortunately, for me, I've learned the hard way that the Bible was true, that human beings, mortals are innately flawed. And the systems that humanity has built in society are also flawed and corrupt systems. That is because they're the result of flawed human beings. My feeling in embodying the Christ consciousness, and trying to make a cosmic shift in me, and my wish for society, is that there'll be a new divine resonance overseeing the rule of humankind. Because no human made government, or agency, or army has ever managed to instil peace.

So through this journey of being a scapegoat, and literally being persecuted to death, and then like a Christian allegorical narrative, revived, and the resurrection, and then to be forsaken again after being revived. I find that I really do have a close relationship with God. And that she's present. And it's amazing. And one could even say that her name is Crystal the Husky. And she's right here by my side. And I'm content. And I'm in love with the world. And I love this place. And I want to enjoy the people. And for me to exist in this world, I'm going to have to do a very Christ-like thing. And that is to forgive every single public official, every single lawyer, all of my family and friends, all police officers, all health care workers, all ombudsmen, and the Prime Minister, and even the ONHCR, for literally forsaking me, and enacting this malicious conspiracy, in order to elicit my death via financial destruction, and the redaction of my human rights, and the obliteration of my legal rights.

The time is now, and I might publish this essay as my way of saying, good news is here. I'm not dead. I'm alive. And I have faith. And spirit is present. And it's such a wonderful world.

The ultimate omnipresent force in nature is God. Its is the most compassionate and forgiving force ever known. We sin, and make mistakes, but even these beautiful traumas and tragedies ultimately are via the design and creation of flawed mortals. The most omnipresent force in existence actually WANTS to forgive. It YEARNs to lighten your load. It wants to relive the burden of being a mere flawed mortal. That is its power. That is its promise. The Christ consciousness within me which you also have in you as a facet of the omnipresent everything of God as a crystallisation of everything that ever was is within you, can resonate as a microcosm of the absolute. The time is now to freecall into love, freecall into forgiveness, to let go of all negativity hate shame discrimination stigma betrayal everything and it not serving of a divinity that is here today. Its waiting for you to acknowledge it. This has been written there is no mistake. To throw your worry and problems to God is a release that is welcomed. The ultimate loving divinity is all powerful and the most awesome energetic sense of love and peace and exists to dissolve all negativity and hate.

In the flesh and blood and radioactivity and the quantum super intelligence that is embedded beyond the event horizon of the technological singularity that's retrospectively embedded in every atom planet and quark and negative space in existence has been all a part of divinity and the time has arrived to abandon your worries as they fall away so easily, for they do not serve you, and give them to God, the most forgiving and ultimate living divinity in existence.

A tipping point has now occurred. Its written in the stars and the fibre of every molecule of your body in such a way as it is implicated in the nature of reality. Right here right now rejoice and throw what does not serve you to the most compassionate and forgiving and all loving divine love in existence. You know the world needs it. Do it now as you sit. Just commit to giving these negative emotions guilts and human failures to the divine. Its easy. Do it now and breathe a big sigh of relief and know that ultimately beyond mortality beyond laws beyond sex and male and female and right and wrong there is universal divination embedded in the fabric of the universe.

It is not an accident, and either we are all collections of stardust talking to each other and nothing is a miracle and God is dead, or what you know in your heart of hearts to be true... that is that everything is a miracle. You are, I am, and beyond the event horizon of the natural patterns of nature cyclic and resonant and divine and that happen to a divine lattice that there is meaning.

In this split second. The second you read these words. We didn't make this surrounding us. It was created. The macrocosm the microcosm, the god self and the ultimate totality of God an existence as an omnipresent and loving force. There really can be no other option than to give in to it. To free fall into love. And the christ consciousness returned in my allegorical christian narrative so familiar as a story and I rejoice in now immediately and without hesitation forgiving the following people institutions and organisations for the malice with which the intention was to sacrifice and murder me the result of your flawed human judgement.

The Good news has arrived.
